

Taralli

A June 18 Puglia cooking-class recipe for boiled-and-baked olive-oil and white-wine taralli.

Dan Green

2026-06-18

Table of contents

Source	1
Ingredients	1
Preparation	2
Notes	3

Taralli are the sort of snack that make industrial crackers look ashamed of themselves: rings of flour, olive oil, white wine, and salt, shaped by hand, boiled, dried, and baked until crisp. This version comes from the June 18 Puglia cooking class / food experience.

Source

- Recipe source: Domenico Bianco, “Taralli,” in PK recipes, PDF created in Canva, dated May 8, 2026.
- Trip context: June 18, 2026 cooking class / food experience during the Strada Toscana Puglia tour; Columbus itinerary context: `daily_itineraries/day-14-2026-06-18-puglia.qmd` and `regions/puglia.qmd`.
- Original PDF: PK Taralli recipe

Ingredients

- 500 g flour — a mix of not-strong flours, such as whole wheat flour, type 1 flour, and 00 flour
- 180 g extra-virgin olive oil — about 35–38% of the flour weight
- 200 g white wine — about 40% of the flour weight; the source notes to add 20 g more because some may be reduced during boiling

- 10 g salt

The source notes that the oil and wine quantities can change depending on the flour. If using more whole wheat flour relative to 00 flour, reduce the oil to about 150 g and increase the wine to about 220 g.

Preparation

1. Make the dough

In a large bowl, pour in the flour, olive oil, and salt. Add the wine while mixing with a fork or by hand.

When the dough comes together in the bowl, move it to a kneading board. Work the dough with strength but slowly until it is smooth. Cover with kitchen film and a tea towel.

2. Rest and shape

After the dough rests for 10 minutes, take a piece of dough and roll it by hand on the board into a large, thick rope.

Cut the rope into large cube-like pieces. Roll each piece by hand into a rope about as thick as a middle finger, then close it into a ring.

Put the shaped taralli on a large tray covered with baking foil. Continue until all the dough is shaped.

3. Boil

In a large saucepan, bring 5 litres water to a boil.

Once boiling, add about 10 taralli at a time. Stir gently with a spoon. Wait for the taralli to rise naturally to the surface, then quickly remove them from the water.

Place the boiled taralli on a large surface covered with baking paper — a baking tray, large plate, or kneading board. Continue boiling the taralli in batches of 10.

4. Dry

Leave the boiled taralli to dry in a ventilated place, or in the kitchen with a slightly open window, for at least 2 hours, until quite dry.

5. Bake

Bake at 190°C for 20–30 minutes, depending on the oven.

Notes

- The boil-and-dry step is not ornament. It gives taralli their proper texture.
- The dough should be smooth before shaping; rough dough will make a rough ring, and then everyone must pretend not to notice.
- Flour choice matters. Whole wheat absorbs differently, so the recipe gives sensible room to adjust oil and wine.